

At Upland's Valencia School

Enrollment jump takes officials by surprise

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

Upland School District administrators are engaged in some last-minute juggling to accommodate an unexpectedly high enrollment of first graders at Valencia School.

The two first grade classes each have 36 students, according to Principal Roger Schulte, and he is interviewing applicants for a new teacher to help handle the students.

Valencia is the only school in the district with overcrowded conditions after boundaries were redrawn last spring.

H. Hartley Hillsen, county assistant superintendent of schools in charge of instruction, said the state calls for an average of 30 students per each primary class. If that average is not met throughout the semester, the school may receive a sanction in the form of reduced state funds.

"It's really too early to make any determinations about class size," said Hillsen. "It may take as long as the first month for a good shake-down period, when you can get class counts that are more or less reliable."

Schulte said the district was taken by surprise this year with the large number of first graders. He said estimates were taken from the kindergarten classes the previous year, and are usually "quite reliable."

Although there have been some transfer students allowed within the school, they generally balance the number of Valencia students who transfer to other districts, he added.

Last year's enrollment at the school averaged 581 students, as compared to a total of 614 students last Friday.

Superintendent George Renworth said the district faced a variety of alternatives in handling the students. The possibility of changing boundaries again was quickly turned down he said, and ordering portable classrooms would take too long. Administrators also decided against renting a classroom at a local church, as that would isolate a small group of students from the rest of the school.

Instead, about 45 first and second-grade students will be combined in a large kindergarten room, with two teachers, one or two aides, and volunteer parents.

"This will get the class size of the other first grades to about 28," said Schulte. "I see the combined room as one class with team teachers — not two different classes trying to work in a single room."

The school already has a second-third grade combined class with about 25 students, and a fourth-fifth grade class with another 25 students.

Schulte said the first-graders for the combined room will be those determined "socially ready" to join with the second-grade class.

"In the primary grades, much of your teaching time is spent in groups working on language, reading and math," he said. "I think this arrangement should work out well for both students and teachers after a strategy is set."

Schulte said the change will be effected as soon as he finds an "outstanding" applicant for the additional teacher's post.

Upland residential construction plunged 76% in '79-'80, city says

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

The number of residential units started in July 1979 through June 1980 in Upland dropped 76 percent from a year earlier, according to the planning department's annual report.

The report, issued last week, outlines building trends and figures for the 1979-1980 fiscal year.

Only 193 building permits for residential units (including single- and multiple-family homes) were issued last year, as compared to 790 in 1978-1979. The change is even more dramatic when compared to the 1,178 units started in the building boom of 1977-1978.

The report blames a nationwide increase in mortgage rates and construction costs during the period for the decline in building.

The decline has yet to make a serious impact on the ratio of housing units to residents, which is now about 2.6 persons per dwelling unit. A ratio of 2.57 persons per unit was cited in 1979.

Planning Director Bill Young said the declining building rate also reflects the reduced supply of vacant land in the city.

"That," he said, "and the conservation of existing neighborhoods through rehabilitation, combined with the inflationary trends."

He said the department is exploring the possibility of establishing a redevelopment agency in the city to assist in revitalizing declining areas.

The City Council adopted an amended housing element to the city's general plan in October, setting forth policies for implementation of a community wide housing rehabilitation program. The program, which deals specifically with the southeast quadrant of the city, led to several zone changes in that area to help conserve the housing stock.

A total of 158 acres, for roughly 468 dwelling units, was set aside by the Planning Commission during the last fiscal year. Valuation of the 193 residential building permits is estimated at $10 million.

Revenue for planning department activities came to $57,802, including fees for committee review, and application fees.

More than 26 percent of the revenue was raised through conditional use permits.

Savoring summer's end

Most park visitors bring a radio for music but Claude Denver of Chino, left, and Dave Stein of Upland make their own with guitars. Fair weather and a peaceful surrounding made a perfect backdrop for their songs. The rich tones of their instruments wafted softly across Memorial Park in Upland as other visitors relaxed, hoping to savor the last few days of summer.

Upland allows a wing extension

Upland planners allowed the owners of a mobile home to squeeze an awning 11 inches into the side yard setback, but made it more difficult for others to ask for similar variances.

LeRoy Brown, who owns a coach in the Upland Meadows Mobile Home Park on Foothill Boulevard, added a 12-foot-wide awning over his carport as required by park management.

After the project was completed, he discovered the support posts for the awning were incorrecly placed, and the addition extended into the 5-foot setback required from the lot line by city regulations.

Brown maintained the stakes delineating lot boundaries had been moved, resulting in the mistake.

City staff recommended against the variance, stating in a report to commissioners that misplacement of the posts was "apparently due to misinterpretation of the approved carport awning plans by the awning contractor, rather than the incorrect location" of boundary stakes.

The commission voted against staff recommendation, recognizing the hardship and difficulty already experienced by Brown.

To prevent such variance requests from becoming commonplace, however, commissioners determined that the property owner must file the request in the future, rather than the coach owner.

The request would then be treated as a commercial variance, with a filing fee of $500, as opposed to a homeowner variance for only $50.

In other action, commissioners:

— Approved tentative subdivision maps for 43 single-family lots on 13 acres between 20th and 21st streets, west of San Antonio Avenue, and for nine lots at the northeast corner of Winston Way and 16th Street.

— Passed a conditional use permit for a 60-unit planned residential development on the south side of Arrow Highway, west of Benson Avenue.

— Allowed the conversion of an existing automobile repair garage to a professional-commercial office building at the corner of Second Avenue and C Street.

— Approved a conditional use permit for a one-story medical clinic on the south side of Foothill Boulevard, west of Grove Avenue.

Upland reserve officers Bill Shipcott, left, and Dick Noville pause for a minute before going on duty. Reserves on the force have the same responsibilities as regular officers.

Upland's reserve police officers come from many walks of life

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

On the surface they don't have much in common — a contractor, a pharmacist, a private businessman. Yet they can all carry a gun, have the power of arrest, and look and act like police officers.

As part of the Upland Police Department's reserve officer program, the men have virtually all the duties of a peace officer, according to Capt. Merle Arneson.

Arneson has headed the group of volunteers for nearly three years. He said the reserves can be broken down into roughly two types of people.

"I'd say half the reserves are men who are interested in becoming a police officer," he said. "They use the reserves as a training ground, a chance to find out if they really want to quit their job and join the force."

"The others come more under the category of dedicated citizens who want to do something for the community."

Arneson said he tries to keep a balance between the two types. Although turnover of those men in the reserves as a civic duty is relatively low, he said he loses others on a regular basis to full-time jobs in the Upland Police Department or to other cities.

"More than 50 percent of the department now came up through the reserves," he said. "Including the chief."

Paul Jung has been a reserve officer for about 2½ years. When he first joined he saw it as a stepping stone to becoming a regular — a full-time officer.

"Since then, I've found it's something I really don't want to do," he said. "There are a lot of pressures and problems associated with the job that I don't want to take on."

He added, however, that he enjoyed the part-time responsibilities of being a reserve, and plans to continue the volunteer work.

Police Chief Coy Estes spent nine months as a reserve before he became a regular. He was working as a machinist at General Dynamics, and didn't want to give up his job until he was sure the police department was the place he wanted to be.

"It gives you a chance to see the bad aspects as well as the good," he said. "It's an excellent opportunity to see what the job is like."

Upland uses only Level I reserves, the highest of three classifications set by the state. To qualify, the applicant must have 200 class-hours in a special police-oriented course, and another 200 hours ride time in a patrol car.

Applicants must also pass a written test and a background and physical test as well.

The course is being offered at Chaffey College this semester, and Arneson said the class-work may be completed in one quarter.

He is currently recruiting more reserves. The department may have as many as 30 at one time, and he estimates there are about 17 on the force now.

Bill Shipcott serves as lieutenant of the reserves. He has been a member of the group for more than 15 years, and a part of the police department for longer than many of the regulars.

"The biggest reward — and my reason for staying in the reserves so long — is the feeling of being involved," he said. "Actually, I'm grateful for the opportunity. I feel it's made me a better person."

Shipcott was captain of the reserves for eight years before a policy to rotate officers was established. There was a time, soon after he started, that he considered becoming a full-time officer, but his contracting business was going well and he decided to stay as a reserve.

"Ninety percent of the time, when you see two officers in a unit, one will be a reserve," he said. "They treat us the same as a regular."

Arneson said the only difference between a reserve and a regular is the silver badge and hatpiece worn by the reserve.

Although many of their duties include security at local sporting events or traffic control, reserves also participate in stake-outs and high-risk situations.

Dick Noville is now captain of the group. He spent 17 years as a regular, 13 of those years with the Ontario Police Department.

When he quit to open up his own business two years ago, he found he missed police work.

"A couple of months later I signed up for the reserves," he said. "I haven't regretted it yet."

Although it is sometimes difficult for him to play "second fiddle" to regulars who have a quarter of his experience on the force, he said the pressure is much less on the reserve.

"I'm never going to forget it," he said of his years as a police officer. "It becomes a part of you after a while."

Arneson encourages any men or women interested in joining the reserves to contact the department. The group meets the first Tuesday of each month, and tries to give a total of 300 hours a month of service from the whole unit.

The city provides $400 a month to split between the men to cover the cost of equipment, and they are occasionally paid for other services.

"The truth is, no one is going to get rich," said Arneson. "But I think the men receive a different kind of reward as a reserve."

"Moonlight and Roses" will set the theme on Oct. 3 for the annual "Les Bal des Enfants Chers" of the Ontario-Pomona Association for Retarded Citizens (OPARC) Auxiliary. Morgan Schwab, 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Schwab of Alta Loma, will be introduced as the 1980 OPARC Poster Child at the ball. He is shown here with Roman Gabriel, former National Football League star quarterback and now head coach of the Cal Poly Pomona football team. Gabriel is honorary ball chairman.

Special training

Crippled Children's Society reactivates speech center

Kathryn MacFarland, director of The Crippled Children's Society, Pomona Valley Center, has announced the reactivation of the Speech and Language Therapy Department which will be open to those in need of special training in this area. Slots are available for new clients. The center's policy has always been no direct client fee for any program offered.

Cecile Button has joined the staff as the speech and language director. She has studied at the University of Iowa, University of La Verne, and University of California. She developed the first speech and language program for Charter Oak Unified Schools, and since that time has been a speech and language pathologist for Los Angeles County schools. She has counseled individuals and groups of all ages.

Recently, Button and co-author Dr. Francesa Bero, director of special education at San Bernardino State College, developed a series of speech and language workbooks entitled, "Total Language Acquisition," which are being used throughout the county schools and in other areas. They deal with relevant subjects; such as, daily living, community, people and sports. Through the multi-sensory approach, the books tend to reinforce the improved articulation, fluency, voice production and self-esteem of the student. Parent participation in the various aspects of the program will be encouraged.

The center also has a year-round heated therapy pool with a Water Safety Instructor on duty from 9 to 5 p.m. weekdays. Instruction in swimming is available for infants, young people, and adults, with physical and developmental handicaps. Information regarding schedules and instructions may be obtained through the center.

The weekly Friday evening young adults program was planned for social interaction, recreation and swimming. Some of their activities include pot luck dinners, swim parties, theater parties, wheelchair and disco dancing, trips to amusement parks.

Those interested in or in need of any of the services may learn more about them by phoning 621-4727, or by visiting the center at 480 S. Indian Hill Blvd., Claremont.

College gets $224,000 grant to help refugees in getting jobs

By STEVE STANDERFER
Staff Writer

With a large number of Indo-Chinese refugees coming into the area, Chaffey College trustees gave unanimous approval Thursday to accept a $224,000 grant that would help refugees become self-sufficient.

However, some teachers at the board meeting criticized the program saying they didn't like instructional programs being taken out of their hands. The program would be handled through the student services division.

The Job Opportunities for Indo-Chinese (JOIN) program is scheduled to begin Wednesday and would be able to assist about 350 refugees in getting jobs.

Art Olguin, a job placement assistant, helped the college obtain the grant from the state Department of Social Services after he noticed there was no program for refugees looking for jobs in San Bernardino and Riverside counties.

Olguin said there has been a large influx of Indo-Chinese refugees into the area in the last year. As they come into the college's job placement office seeking jobs, Olguin found that many employers were turning the refugees away because of language and cultural barriers.

"The Indo-Chinese have difficulty in trying to understand the whole world of work" when it comes to job applications, resumes and interviews, Olguin said today.

"There will be an outreach and recruitment effort for the program, however we have had numerous inquiries already," he said.

Olguin estimates that more than 300 refugees have come to the campus searching for jobs in the last year.

"We have been successful in some of the cases but our current staffing is inadequate," he said. "This will allow for some additional specialized staffing to work with the Indo-Chinese."

Each participant in the program will be assessed to determine individual needs.

Program workers will help them with language skills, vocational training, career development and job placement.

"The eventual goal of this whole program is to prepare the refugees for employment and to develop employment opportunities for them," said Olguin.

"Also it will help...employers and people who deal with Indo-Chinese refugees to understand what are some of the special needs of the Indo-Chinese population."

Not only will it help refugees in the program to become self-sufficient, Olguin said, but the information they gain can be passed on to others as they come into the area.

But, at Thursday's meeting, some teachers seemed unhappy about how the program was to be handled through student services.

Conference examines families' strengths

By LINDA BERGSTEDT
Panorama Editor

No one doubts that the family is in transition and is affected by the changes in the world.

Still families and family life persevere and, while admittedly in a flux, remain as a reality in modern life.

The "traditional family" of breadwinner, homemaker and two children, may be fading from the scene, but there are so many other forms of family — from step-families to extended families, from single-parent ones to migrant groupings.

Family life affects all of us in one way or another. For this reason, a White House Conference on Families was held this summer in three parts — one in Baltimore, Md., another in Minneapolis, Minn., and the final one in Los Angeles.

The stated purpose of the conference — as presented in January 1978 by President Jimmy Carter — was "to examine the strengths of American families, the difficulties they face and the ways in which family life is affected by public policies."

Three local women participated in the Los Angeles conference. They were Shirley Abrams of Pomona and Dorothy Bingham of Ontario as guests and Dr. Ella Mitchell of Claremont, a delegate.

Delegates for the conference were selected by three different methods — some by their peers, others by appointments from the governor and Legislature and others by a task force.

Mrs. Mitchell, an American Baptist minister and a retired kindergarten teacher, is an international consultant on multi-cultural education. She was appointed a delegate to the White House Conference by Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr.

During a recent interview, the three women shared their views of the conference, concurring that once again it was a situation of "experts telling us instead of asking us."

They felt that an upcoming state conference on the same topic should be designed as a follow-through to the White House Conference, but it isn't.

"We should be implementing (what was learned) now, not discussing and discussing it further," Mrs. Mitchell emphasized.

"Yes, it's the 'we're going to tell you' approach again," agreed Mrs. Abrams. She is chairman of the Statehouse Conference on Children and Youth and president of the California Council on Children and Youth.

Recommendations from all three parts of the White House Conference have been compiled with the more than 2,000 delegates being in agreement on a wide range of proposals.

Most important of the issues to emerge that affect today's families were the need for flexible job schedules and an all-out assault on drug and alcohol abuse.

Ninety percent of the delegates at each of the three conferences called for work policies more responsive to the family needs. Directions proposed by all three groups were flextime, job sharing, flexible leave policies and child care.

Delegates also called for the tax codes to be revised — especially those affecting day care, home care for the elderly, inheritance and married couples — all facets of family life.

The need for home care for the elderly provided a consistent focus of attention, with changes being sought in Medicaid/Medicare policies to encourage home care support alternatives.

Also being chided were certain government policies that have negative affect on families. It was suggested that laws and regulations be analyzed in terms of their "impact on families."

Calling for "national recognition" for the "intrinsic value of homemakers," delegates recommended tax-law revisions, including tax exemptions for homemakers caring for children and elderly and handicapped family members in the home.

Overwhelming majorities at all three meetings sought programs from all levels to combat alcohol and drug abuse on the national and local level.

Concern for handicapped family members comprised three of the top 10 recommendations at Los Angeles, including development of government programs responsive to the needs of the handicapped and enforcement of existing laws supporting the disabled.

Recommendations were passed urging "all branches of government (to) strength and enforce existing legislation on programs of full employment," the opportunity for everyone "to obtain a job which provides a feeling of usefulness and dignity at wages sufficient to support a decent standard of living" and implementation of the Humphrey-Hawkins Act.

Receiving strong support was the concept of alternative forms of child care — both center and home based.

The media was attacked for its portrayal of the use of drugs and alcohol with Los Angeles delegates recommending that "FCC licensure and programming criteria" provide that media, especially television, be discouraged from this practice.

Treatment and preventive services, as well as educational programs aimed at halting trends in family violence were suggested by all delegates.

Discriminatory housing practices came under strong attack from the three delegations, who supported family life education, prevention of adolescent pregnancy and abhorred discrimination in employment.

Next: The three local participants share their views on the White House Conference and talk about where we go from here.

Books reviewed

Patrons of the Upland Public Library have turned to book reviewing. Linda Yao, library director, reports.

The new "Mark My Words" review file contains reviews of books patrons have been reading including recent titles, fiction and non-fiction.

"The reviews, though short, get right to the point," Mrs. Yao said.

As examples, she said Joanne Greenberg's "High Crimes" and "Misdemeanors" was rated "superb." Comments on other books have been "disappointing, confusing, boring, boring, boring."

Patrons are not required to write comments. There are boxes which can be checked on the bookmark form which is being sent home with each reader. The forms are not signed, so the reviewer's name does not appear.

The "Mark My Words" file is located on top of the new book shelf on the mall level, east of the circulation desk.

"Patrons are encouraged to use this file for the benefit of other patrons, for fun and to find good reading suggestions," Mrs. Yao said.

show starts

One of the southland's most popular and longest running entertainment attractions, the Cal Poly Pomona Sunday Arabian horse show, will begin its 55th season October 5 in the W.K. Kellogg Arabian Horse Center. This will be the first season the shows are held monthly instead of each week on the first Sunday of the month.

Cereal magnate W. K. Kellogg began the tradition of the Sunday Arabian horse shows for the public in the 1920s. The Cal Poly campus, then his ranch, was a popular recreation spot of the stars of the silver screen.

The hour-long show is designed to demonstrate the versatility and fine quality of the Arabian horse under both English and western tack. During the course of each show, the Arabian's abilities as a three-gaited horse, jumper, working cow horse, trail horse, stock horse and pleasure horse are demonstrated. The Arabians will also display the grace and action desired in a pleasure driving horse.

Featured horses are the famous Cal Poly Arabians raised and/or trained on campus. These horses are also involved in the Arabian breeding program initiated by W.K. Kellogg in 1949. The training and handling of the horses is done exclusively by Cal Poly staff and students.

The horse shows will be held the first Sunday of the month through November 3. After a December break, they will resume on January 5 and continue through until June 7.

Admission to the shows is $1.25 for adults, 75 cents for senior citizens and 25 cents for children under 12 years.

For further information regarding the Sunday Arabian horse shows, please telephone the W.K. Kellogg Arabian Horse Center, 714/598-4153, Monday - Friday, between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Sheriffs asking for information regarding missing Upland man

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

The Riverside Sheriff's Office is requesting information regarding an Upland man who has been missing since July 15.

Joseph Hudrik, 53, was last seen leaving the General Telephone Company office in Elsinore, where he had worked that day.

Detective Mac McIver, of the Lake Elsinore sheriff's office, said Hudrik left the office about 5:30 p.m. after asking a fellow employee about the Ortega Highway which cuts through the Cleveland National Forest.

Hudrik, an avid hiker, was known to scout out new localities for camping trips. He discussed taking the highway to San Clemente, then continuing north to his home in Upland.

That same employee saw Hudrik's 1971 Toyota Landcruiser, green with a white top, parked in front of a restaurant in the vicinity of the mountains about an hour later.

The sheriff's department conducted an intensive search after Hudrik's wife reported him missing, using airplanes to scout the mountains along the treacherous road.

The man who gave Hudrik directions also said he told him how to put the truck into four-wheel drive. There are several areas in the forest set aside for off-road vehicles.

Law enforcement officials have not been able to locate the vehicle, and tracers on his credit cards have not shown any use since July.

McIver said he had discovered nothing to indicate foul play. In addition, Hudrik had worked for the phone company more than 20 years, and had not missed a day on the job for at least 15 years.

Hudrik's wife Marlene and their five children, ages 15-23, live in Upland. The Mormon Church, to which they belong, has helped the family out financially since July, and is sending Mrs. Hudrik to college where she is learning secretarial skills.

"I haven't had an outside job since I had my first child," she said. "I should be done school in about six months."

One of his daughters recently placed an ad in the local paper in hope of finding someone who has seen Hudrik or his vehicle.

Hudrik is a white male, 5 feet 8 inches tall, weighing about 148 pounds. He has brown hair and eyes, and wears glasses.

License number on the Landcruiser is 908DCZ.

McIver encourages anyone who has seen Hudrik or his truck to contact him at the Lake Elsinore sheriff's office, 674-3131.

New CIW superintendent began career at same prison

By BOB NAGEY
Staff Writer
Rookie Correctional Officer Gladys L. Crawford has returned to the California Institution for Women near Chico after an absence of nine years — this time as superintendent of the state's only women's prison.

It was a fast-paced rise for the 53-year-old former Pomona resident who was elevated from her job as associate superintendent at Soledad to succeed Kathleen M. Anderson. Mrs. Anderson now works as an associate superintendent at the nearby California Institution for Men.

Mrs. Crawford, a native of Indiana, is the sixth superintendent assigned to the 28-year-old prison. But if the institution expected a stereotype of the hardened warden who solves problems by sending troublesome prisoners into isolation and who maintains order by keeping the inmates off-balance and frightened, she didn't fulfill that image.

The institution instead got a soft-spoken, calm and almost shy individual who plays down the fact that she has charge of the toughest women in California.

"Those who are sent here are people who happen to be in violation of the penal code," she said. "To me, being in prison and away from family and friends is punishment enough."

Her secretary, Carol Al-tobell, describes her as "above all, competent." And Marvin Ryar, associate superintendent at the nearby men's prison, reported she established a reputation as a good administrator during her two-year stint at Soledad.

But she is also disarmingly considerate.

"Will you allow me to be 10 minutes late so I can make two important phone calls?" she asked her interviewer. "I apologize for running late."

She is trusting. "I'm really quite new at this job and need all the help I can get, particularly in my relationship with the outside. Can I ask you for some guidance?"

She is compassionate. "Some of our every day difficulties come from our overcrowded conditions. The rooms are designed to hold one resident but now many of them have to be shared by two women, each with her own private belongings. That makes for tension. That's unfortunate."

She is program-oriented. She believes training and outside support are so important that she has asked for the creation of a deputy superintendent position just for that. Sylvia Johnson, a deputy probation officer from Los Angeles County and a consultant to the Riverside County Health Department, has been named to that office.

And she is a realistic person who strongly believes in workable structure. "There is no point in setting rules that can't be enforced," she explained. "Each resident is entitled to know where she stands and what is expected of her. No one should be kept in the dark."

She believes one of the strengths of the institution is the flexibility of its employees. "They have to live with all types of situations day after day," she explained. "They seem to draw strength from the diversity of the work. They see themselves as plus factors in dealing with the inmates."

Some of the inmates come from lives of abuse and degradation. And for them their stay at CIW may be the first time they are in contact with normal male figures who don't pose threats, she added.

Another project she is committed to enlarge is outside contributions. When she became a correctional officer at CIW in 1964, the institution was noted for its garment factory, nursing program and culinary arts which trained waitresses, dishwashers and kitchen help.

These programs are still there. But the institution now includes other vocational training programs.

These include the computer field, electronics, landscaping and others. In addition, college degrees in many fields are offered by the University of La Verne.

And even though the outside job program is quite extensive, there is always room for more. "Most women who are trained here make good employees," she insists. "All they need is opportunities."

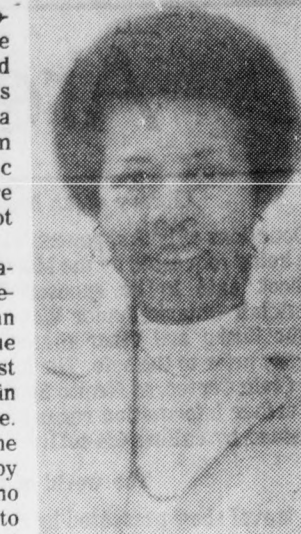

But for her all that is not enough. She wants to bring more of the fine arts to the institution to "let the soul grow." She is seeking volunteers who can entertain or teach music, drawing, acting and writing.

"I'm not one to hold the prison close to my chest," she explained. "My philosophy is to let members of the community come here and see what the institution is really like, unless there is a good reason to keep them out. I believe more public exposure to what we are doing here can dispel a lot of misunderstanding."

Because of the rural location of the prison in Frontiera — more of a concept than a place on Pine Avenue southeast of Chico — most people have difficulty in getting there the first time.

Mrs. Crawford said she hopes to change that by asking the San Bernardino County Road Department to post more visible signs at the key intersections that lead to the institution.

Patients move in

Health Services Center's dedication slated Oct. 12

By VONNE ROBERTSON
Staff Writer

After many delays, 35 patients have moved into the new Health Services Center at Pilgrim Place in Claremont.

The patients, 29 from the retirement center and six from the community, were moved from McCabe Rest Home at Pilgrim Place. Each patient was accompanied by a volunteer who helped transport personal possessions.

Ground was broken for the center early in 1979. The modern, one-story medical center, is located on the western border of Pilgrim Place. Land for the center was purchased and the old grove home on the site, the Zetterberg House, was moved to the Pitzer College campus.

Plans for moving patients to the new health center were delayed several times last summer. This was caused by missing kitchen equipment and a plumbers strike.

The modern health center includes private and two-bed rooms, apartments, classrooms, a dining room for patients, a solarium, classrooms, a kitchen and employees' dining room. The building surrounds a courtyard and has several patios off patients' rooms.

Formal dedication of the Health Service Center is planned on Oct. 12. The dedication speaker will be Norman Cousins of the UCLA School of Medicine. The now-vacant McCabe Rest Home will be remodeled into apartments.

The health center is designed to serve both Pilgrim Place and the community. It will have facilities for hospice-like care and special care for elderly patients who may become confused and need special attention.

Fiberwork, drawings exhibited

The Fern Jacobs exhibit of fiberwork and drawings has opened at the Rex W. Wignall Museum Gallery on the Chaffey College campus and will continue through Oct. 31.

Jacobs will be presenting a workshop of her coil method of fiber construction from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Oct. 11. A fee will be charge with a special reduction for Museum Gallery Auxiliary members and students.

Call, 987-1737, extension 475 or 476 for further information.

A workshop set for Oct. 4 is filled. If demand warrants, more workshops will be scheduled.

The gallery hours are

Monday through Thursday from noon to 4 p.m. Friday from noon to 5 p.m. and Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. The gallery also is open Tuesday and Wednesday from 7 to 9 p.m. It is closed on Saturdays and holidays.

Addiction to Valium is a nightmare for Uplander

"Need to see doctor. Can't stand my body or mind. Static interference of thoughts. Agitated! Body hot. Sweat changes... When I'm like this, I can't stand to be alone. Get lost in my mind walking to room. Forget. Look at objects but static interference keeps logic out ... Feel imprisoned in a machine malfunctioning. Can't get out."

By DINAH ROSE
Staff Writer

Pages from Darlene Nation's journal in January paint a terrifying picture of pain, fear and despair. The 38-year-old Upland woman had unwittingly become addicted to Valium — a drug that only a few years ago doctors thought was free of any serious side effects.

Nation was on Valium five years before a doctor in Pomona recognized the symptoms — the same symptoms other doctors diagnosed as everything from alcoholism to paranoid schizophrenia.

Her problems began in 1975. She was sitting in her car at a stoplight along the Pacific Coast Highway in Newport Beach when another vehicle smashed into her car from behind.

Doctors called it a "typical whiplash case," and assigned her to physical therapy sessions five days a week for six months, then cut it down to three days a week for another year.

She was also placed on typical medication for back and neck injuries — including codeine and Valium.

Valium, a member of the benzodiazepine family of "minor" tranquilizers, is used primarily as a muscle relaxant and to treat anxiety and tension. Developed in 1960, doctors hailed the benzodiazepines as an attractive alternative to barbiturates — effective as relaxers, yet not lethal. Today, more prescriptions are written for Valium than any other drug.

Nation's injuries from the accident gave her a great deal of pain, and she had difficulty holding down jobs. She worked in a crisis center, as a waitress, as a travel agent — but the long days proved to be too much.

"I was just not functioning well," she recalls. "I had pain day and night, and eventually came totally apart mentally."

As the jobs disappeared, so did her money, her credit rating, possessions and many of her friends. Debts were turned over to collectors and she had trouble finding enough money for day-to-day expenses.

"After one year, the mental and physical stress was so bad, I just was not able to function the same way I did before. I totally lost perspective on everything."

She went to a doctor who chastised her, saying her problems were the result of a bad case of depression and the sooner she got back to work, the sooner it would begin to clear up.

In 1978, she entered a local hospital on the advice of her psychotherapist. "They continued to give me Valium, this time for anxiety rather than as a muscle relaxant," she said. "I was back a few months later — and each time I got a different psychiatric diagnosis."

She sought placement in a board and care home. By this time, she was consciously abusing the Valium, but it was as an escape from her lack of control over her own life.

"I felt very crazy. I had no idea I was addicted. I'm a college grad, and thought I knew what was going on — then here all of a sudden I saw my life ending."

"I wasn't consciously suicidal, but things were pretty grim. I thought I was dying — and I was losing my will to live."

"I feel as if I'm existing in a constant state of 'IMPLOSION'... As if I am to the point of no return. Death. Insanity. Is this why they performed lobotomies? If I were to go all the way, or be in this condition years ago, would I have had shock treatment or a lobotomy?"

As she continued to lose control, Nation began drinking heavily.

"That really scared me," she remembered. "I have a history of alcoholism in my family. I didn't think the drugs were a problem, but the drinking definitely was."

One morning in September 1979, she awoke at 4 a.m. with the conviction she was dying. She rushed to the emergency room of a local hospital, where personnel asked questions, including if she had been drinking.

"I said yes, and they determined it was all caused by the alcohol."

"And then the next thing I knew, I was banging all over the gurney."

She was thrown by a violent seizure, and ended up in the hospital's intensive care unit. The doctor told her it was from drinking, and Nation remembers feeling a tremendous guilt about her lack of self-control.

First of two parts

"But he never did question me about the Valium or any other medication I was taking. They put me in the psychiatric unit for a month, and I remained on Valium as part of the treatment."

She was in a downward spiral. After contacting Alcoholics Anonymous, she attended detoxification program at another hospital. Again, she was given a benzodiazepine, Librium.

"Sure, I felt better. I was getting the drug I needed.

Then I got out and figured my problems were over. 'Now I'm cleansed.'"

But the symptoms started up once again: paranoia, sickness, nightmares. She attended AA meetings every day, returned to therapy — and medications.

And she began drinking again.

"I finally figured this must really be me—this morose, shrouded and very morbid person. I was dying inside."

Then someone from AA told her about a new program at Pomona Valley Community Hospital, led by Dr. Vernelle Fox.

"I got admitted in January, and was interviewed by Dr. Fox the following morning," said Nation. "She was the first one to ask me about my other medications. I said I'd been on valium and codeine for the past six years, although I wasn't taking them presently." (She had forgotten the Librium she was currently on.)

Fox recognized the symptoms as a possible case of benzodiazepine addiction.

"She said to me, 'Tootsie, you've just begun. You're in for some tough times — but you're going to make it.'"

After a month in the hospital, and innumerable return visits, Nation has conquered the worst of the addiction. Even now, she still has traces left of the nightmare.

"I'm slowly getting my memory back, but still have periods that are complete blanks," she said. "Things still fade sometimes."

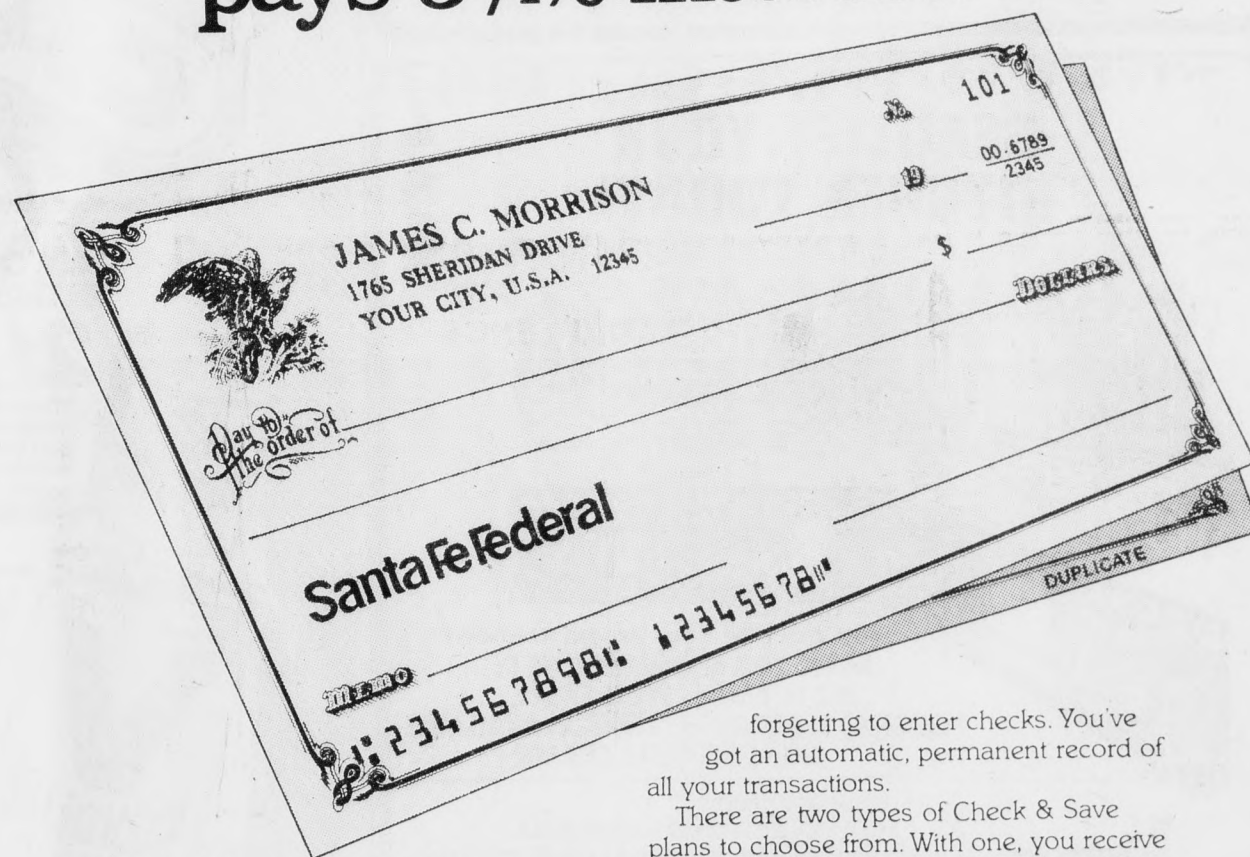

She attends a women's group at the hospital regularly, and keeps in close contact with the staff that helped her through the worst weeks.

Nation is struggling to regain some of the financial stability she enjoyed before the accident, and revels in being what she called "normal" again. She's making contacts with friends she hasn't talked with for years, and is starting classes this month to learn interpretive signs for the deaf and begin work on a new career.

Baptist fellowship starts new church

The Whittier Area Baptist Fellowship has decided to grow — in a new way. Rather than merely adding members, it has begun multiplying by starting a new church. Beginning this summer with about 80 people who live in the Walnut, Diamond Bar, and Rowland Heights area, the new ministry met each Thursday for Bible study at the Methodist Church in Walnut. Then on Sept. 14 at 10 a.m. at the Walnut High School, the first morning worship service was held with more than 150 in attendance.

The new church is pastored by the Rev. Brian Larson, an assistant pastor of the Whittier Area Baptist Fellowship for the past four years. Pastor Larson graduated from Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, Ill., and Bethel Theological Seminary in St. Paul, Minn., and is presently finishing his doctorate at Talbot Seminary in La Mirada. He seeks to present the Bible in an interesting way that makes it apply to everyday life.

Rev. Larson will speak on "The Marks of Maturity" at 10 a.m. Sunday School is offered for children. The new church also has small groups called "Fellowship Circles" which meet in homes the first Sunday evening of each month to build friendships.

Leadership has been provided by a steering committee composed of chairman Joe Cupp of Fullerton, vice - chairman Al Paradis of Walnut, Carl Bauer of La Habra, Ron Clark of Rowland Heights, Jack Hoffa of Brea, Bryan Lewis of Pomona, Jim Rhodes of La Mirada, and John Sudduth of Rowland Heights.

Land is being sought on which to build permanent facilities, to provide a variety of ministries for the community for years to come.

Creative fine, home arts attract fair goers

By MARGE GROSS
Staff Writer

The time is here again for singing. "Hi, ho — come to the fair." The Los Angeles County Fair opened in Pomona Friday and will continue through Oct. 12.

The carnival atmosphere is mixed in with the chirping of chickens, moo-ing of cows, voices of barkers, happy cries of children, balloons afloat and escaping into the sky, tradesmen plugging their wares.

In the two huge buildings which house the creative works of artists and homemakers from all over Southern California, fair goers are seeing a tremendous assortment of originality and creative work.

Nadine Lowrey of Chino and Pat Mayeda of Ontario have combined their efforts for many years to put the Home Arts building in shape for opening day at the fair.

Lowrey handles plans, exhibits, judging, shows and the other million jobs necessary to make things run smoothly. Mayeda's artistic talents direct how the entries will be exhibited.

Consequently, every year the Home Arts building is like finding a treasure chest of beautiful hand-made articles — dolls, afghans, rugs, wedding gowns, quilts and more quilts, sweaters, carvings, knitting and an odd assortment of other arts and craft items.

This year the exhibit of doll houses is drawing a great deal of attention from visitors. The day before the fair opened, La Verne Macy of Pomona and Irene Picerno of Ontario were found carefully doing a catalog inventory of the doll houses.

The houses are quite large and complete inside and out — even to the lady of the Victorian home with her skirt raised because a tiny mouse is at her feet. The furnishings in all the houses, whether miniatures purchased or hand crafted are truly realistic.

Moving on from the doll houses to the Home Arts center one finds a boutique. Lowrey said this is the first time anything has been sold in Home Arts, but she thought it would be of interest to many. Everything in the boutique has been made by clever and busy hands. The variety offered is fascinating.

Onto the back area, one finds the table settings, small arts such as china painting, Christmas decorations, ceramics and other colorful items.

The day before the fair opened, Joy Nell Cain of Covina and Penny Marino of Upland, both interior designers and home economics instructors, were judging the settings.

An attractive table for a patio luncheon featured black and white checked dishes, tennis-playing ceramic figures and other features.

The judges had just put a blue ribbon on the arrangement. The winner? Jeanne Irwin of Upland.

As always, fair goers will be impressed and educated by what is offered at the Home Arts building.

On to the Fine Arts building to enter into the World of Glass.

Rick Pederson of Claremont has been working every year at the building since 1947. When Millard Sheets retired as director in 1962, Pederson took over.

He proudly showed off the unusual and brilliant glass shipped up from Mexico.

In the building's center is a Chinese tea house. This red pagoda-like structure has walls of Mexican glass cylinders hanging on wires.

Pederson said in the same area, the glass bells were made by Rhys Williams of Claremont. Williams also made the glass ball atop the tea house.

In the front area, the World of Glass has an Enchanted Forest of real, leafless trees and scattered throughout, huge flowers of Mexican glass "growing."

An interesting stained glass window is the story of Alice in Wonderland made by Ron Riegel of Glendora. It is a beautiful and intriguing piece of art.

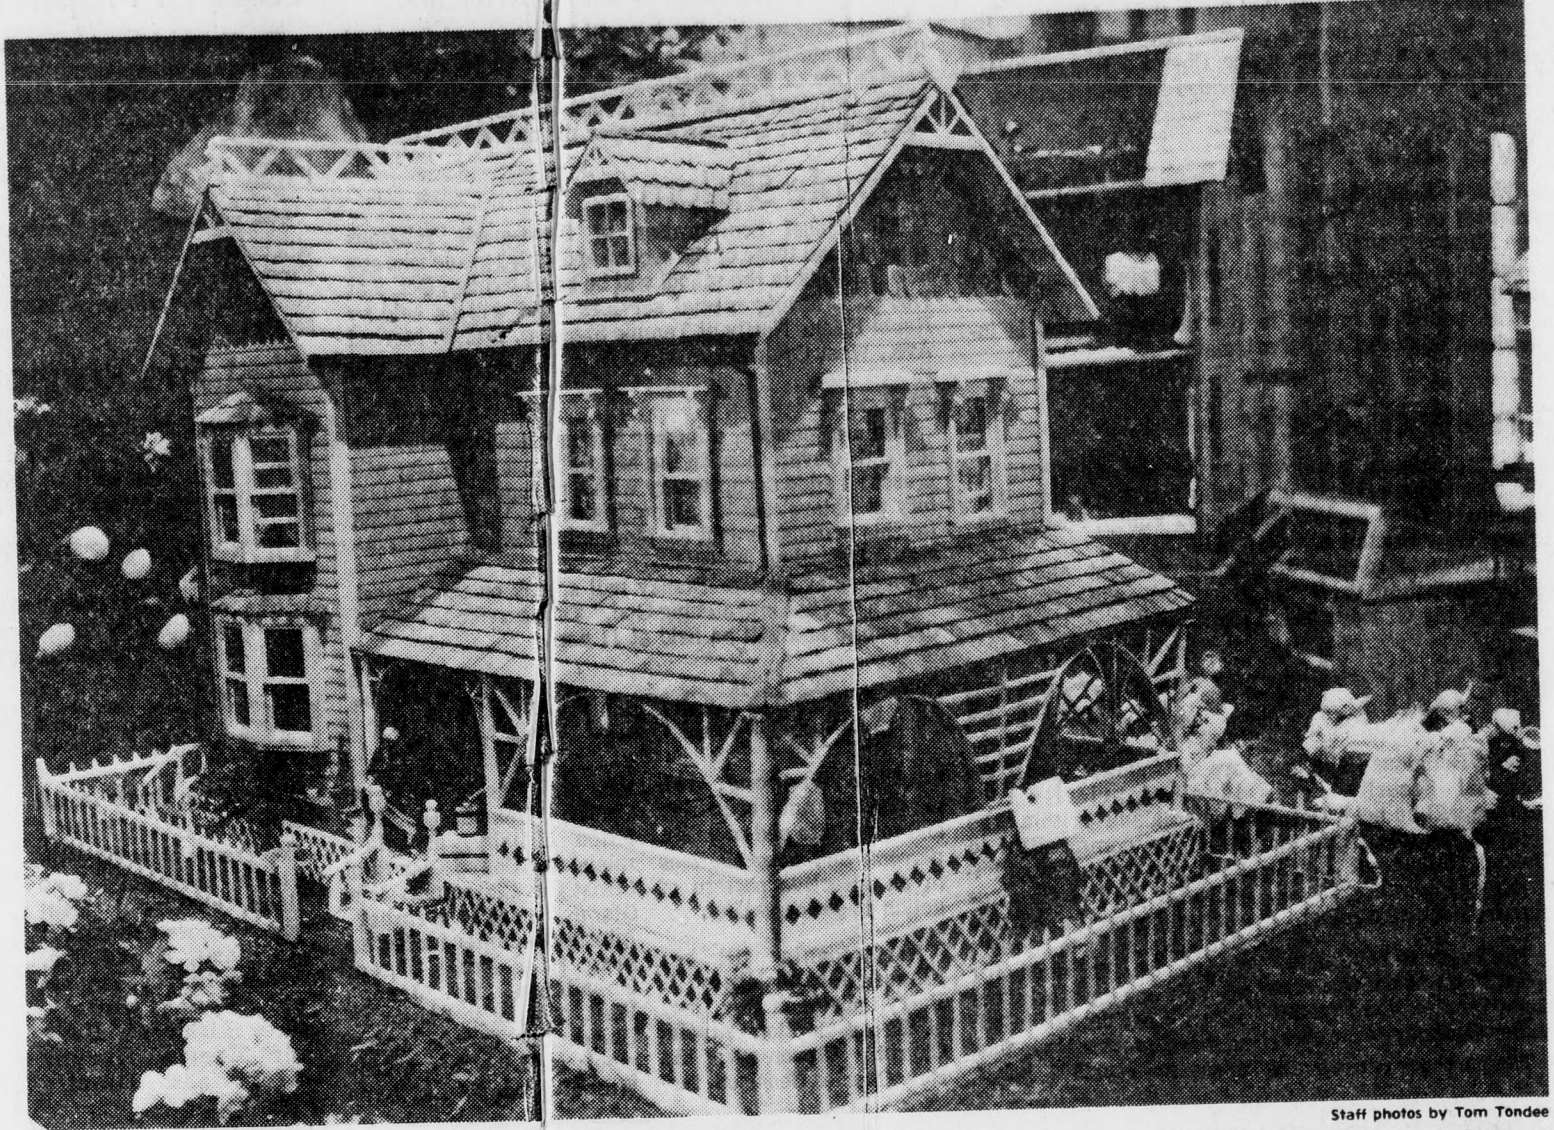

Out in the patio, the glassblowers are hard at work, but it was a young man making glass flutes who captured one's imagination.

James Hall of Los Angeles said he started making bamboo flutes, then decided, "It would be neat to make it out of glass."

He succeeded with his art, and played a tune to show off the depth of tone. He said they couldn't be used in a symphony orchestra as the glass flutes don't have the volume needed, but they are widely used by those interested in renaissance and baroque music.

The time always comes when one needs to rest the feet after walking for hours at the fair. A quiet place is between the two buildings sitting on the rail fence and admiring the massive redwood sculpture of a California Don made by John Svenson of Upland in 1957.

One can rest and contemplate with the hubbub of the fair in the background — for just a bit — there is so much more to see.

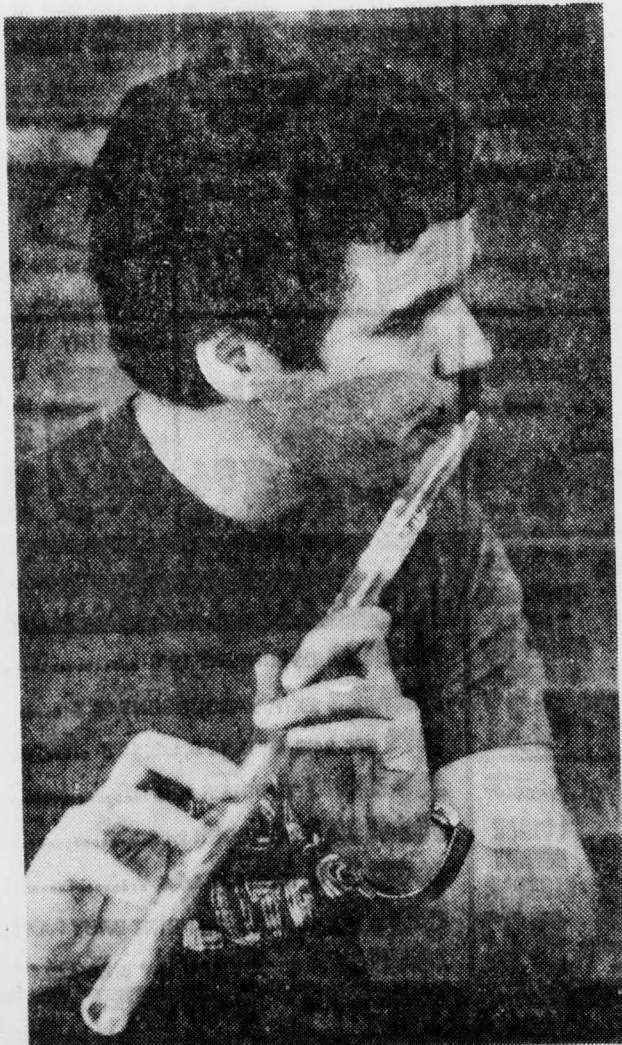

Staff photos by Tom Tondoe

Drawing attention in the Home Arts building at the fair is the exhibit of doll houses. This Victorian home won a blue ribbon for Arthur Wilhelmy Sr. of Monrovia for his realistic work. The doll houses at the fair are complete with furnishings, and

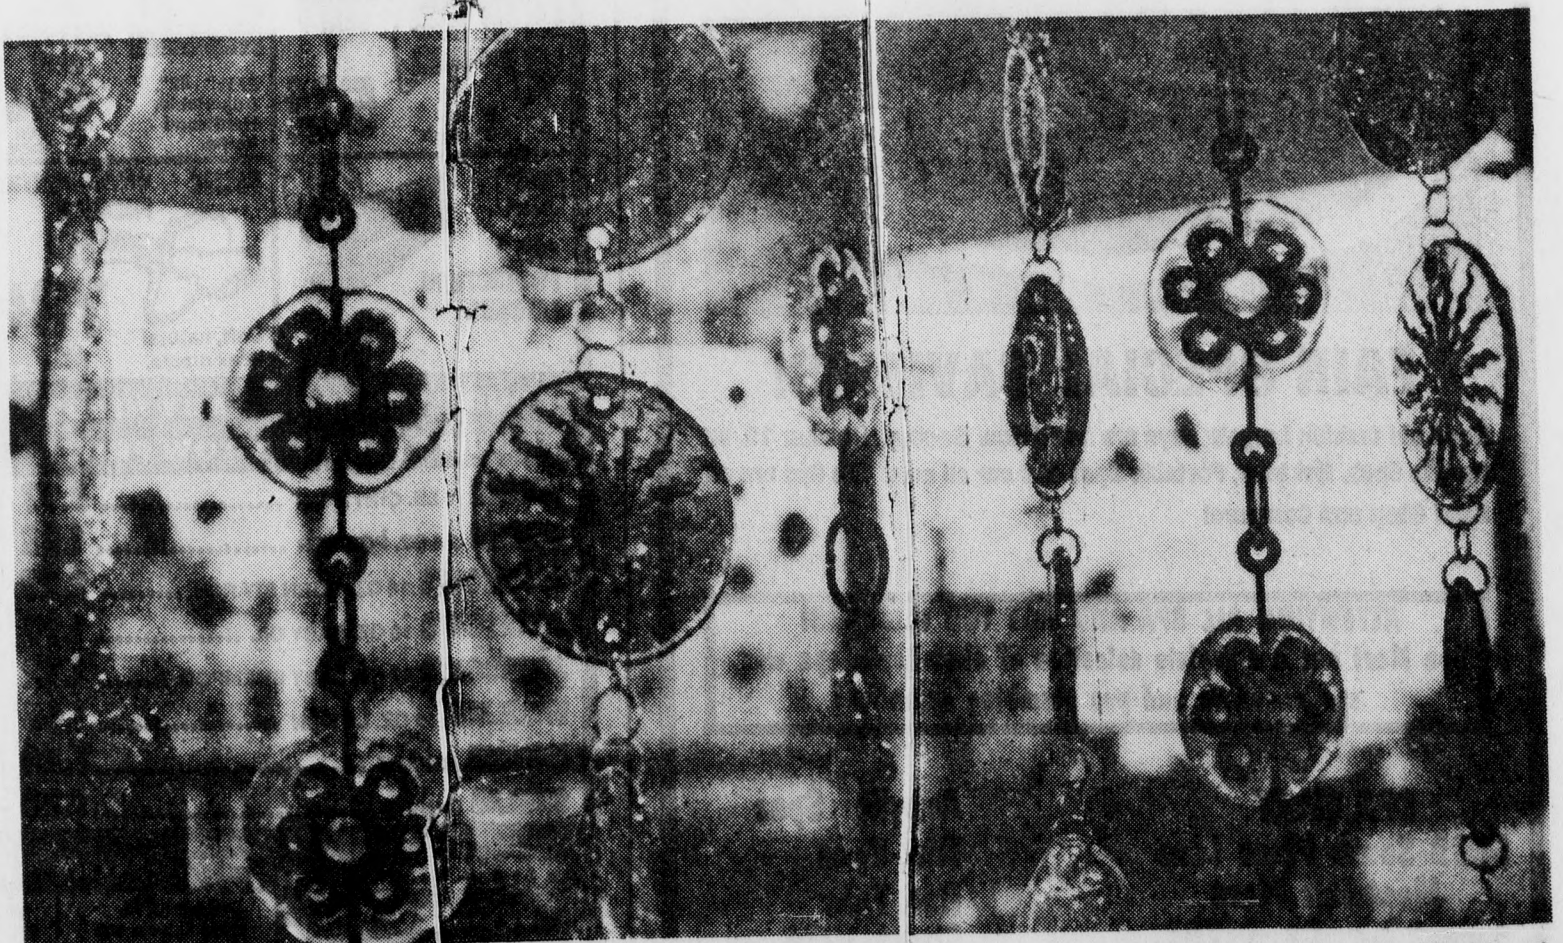

"people." Some furniture is hand crafted, and some delicate miniatures which have been purchased. The little houses have most women thinking back to their childhood and doll house days.

Judging a patio luncheon table setting at the fair are, left, Joy Nell Cain of Covina and Penny Marino of Upland. They are looking for originality, correctness and use of the theme among other things to select a winner. This black and yellow setting with tennis as the party theme was won by Jeanne Irwin of Upland.

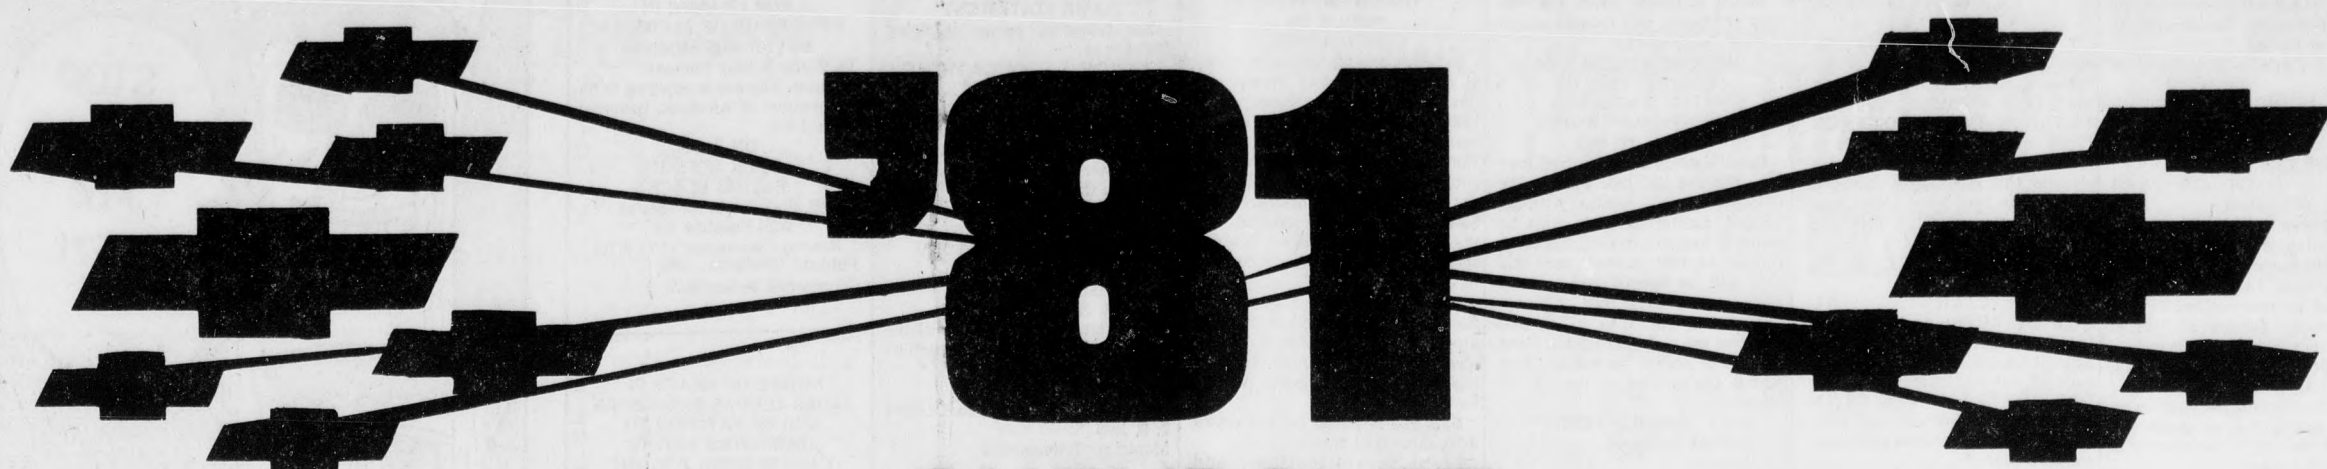

Playing a mellow tune on the glass flute he created is James Hall of Los Angeles. He is demonstrating his craft in the patio of the Fine Arts building at the Los Angeles County Fair. He also makes piccolos of glass. The fair runs through Oct. 12.

These Mexican glass baubles of brilliant colors hang on the Chinese tea house in the Fine Arts building at the Los Angeles County Fair. Rick Pederson, director of the building theme of "World of Glass," arranged for unusual glass to be shipped from Mexico. Another use for the glass is in the "Enchanted Forest" where colorful "flowers" grow. The patio area has many glass blowers at work exhibiting their techniques.

But benefits children

Encyclopedia set major investment

By MICHAEL GRANT
Copley News Service

Recently I mortgaged my right arm to the elbow in order to bring into our home a 30-volume set of encyclopedias.

I writhed some of the striking of the terms. It was possible not so long ago to attend four years of college for the same money. But, as the agent bound the arm snugly into hock, I kept thinking what an investment it was going to be in the children's progress toward a degree in liberal arts or lead guitar or whatever. It further mollified me to learn that in my trade, encyclopedias can be written off.

I had a set when I was a kid. None of my elders was in a position to write it off, either. Of course, in the postwar dollars of '48-'49, I think the promissory note involved only three of any of the five fingers on either hand.

We were so terribly primitive then. The sum of our knowledge filled but 18 volumes. No one then could have guessed that by the 1980s our knowledge would fill enough encyclopedias to build a small doghouse. Who knows how many volumes at what price our children's children will require?

Don't be surprised if a market in encyclopedia futures springs up. They may be the hottest tax shelter of the 21st century. Certainly they will be substantial enough.

Our own books arrived the other day in three stout cartons designed and sealed to withstand the impatience of children and long falls from airplanes.

We got them open after a struggle, and we inventoried the set. It was complete, a summary of knowledge from the font to the frontier, stacked in Regency red splendor in a corner of the living room. Gratiated, we sat back to await the first inquisitive eruptions from the young and eager minds in residence.

A couple of days passed. Neither child expressed the slightest impatience in getting on down the road toward enlarged intellect. Dust swirled in the wake of their innocent pursuits. It floated lazily in the living room sunlight and, following the path of least disturbance, settled on our new encyclopedias.

Then, late on the third afternoon, the younger scholar screwed up his eyebrows, an unmistakable sign of inquisitiveness about to erupt. "What does 'die' mean?" he said.

Leapfrogging through the D's, we found Daphniphyllaceae, Darwin's tubercle, David ap Gruffudd, Dean, Dizzy, Dido and Aeneas, Didrikson, Babe ("see Zaharias, Babe Didrikson"), Dikymelaes, Didymus the Blind, die: "A tool or device for imparting the desired shape, form or finish to a material..."

But he meant die as in living things, of which there was no mention in the intransitive verb mode. "Let's try 'death,'" I said, thumbing toward it, past deglutition ("see swallowing"), Defence of India Act, De anima, Dearborn, Henry, Deat, Marcel, Death.

"Death," I said, "is the total cessation of life processes that eventually occurs in all living organisms. In man, the definition of death may differ according to culture and legal system."

He thirsted for specifics. "How come lizards die?"

There was a list of 49 subtopics under the general question of "death" to which we might refer. Several offered discussions of animals and death, but they were either too general ("death rate studies in animals") or specific enough but a little off the mark ("germfree animals and infection"), unless perhaps there are some germfree lizards lurking out there beneath pristine bushes, stalking infection.

"It doesn't say anything about that here, boy," I said.

"Oh, he said, looking unenlarged intellectually, and maybe even crestfallen. Then he brightened. "Probably lizards die because the cat gets them."

I have no idea where to begin to look, but I would wager my left thumbnail that nowhere in this $800 30-volume set is there any mention of the death rate of lizards due to their deglutition by cats. I would be equally surprised if a significant percentage of the lizard population didn't suffer total cessation of life processes in just that manner.

This is probably less a case of oversight than a case of the kid being smarter than the encyclopedia. And they are, for quite a little while. Kids by the age of 5 already have discovered 90 percent of the truths the world has to offer.

But somewhere innocence has to end and ignorance begin, and beyond that line awaits the other 10 percent, requiring 30 volumes of explanation. Just now it stands Kids 1, Encyclopedia 0, but that will change. They will move on to the world where the encyclopedia has the upper hand, and they will have to learn to get along there. If we are frustrated now, at least we know we have given them a lien in that direction.
